Hair has always been a powerful symbol. What humans do with it says a lot about who we are. Choices about hair are shaped by our society, culture, and personal preferences. Whether it’s the hair on our heads, our faces, or elsewhere, we make decisions about it. We cut it, grow it, shave it off, and cover it. We colour it and style it. Everything about hair communicates how we identify along the lines of gender, culture, class, sexuality, and stage of life. As such a potent symbol, then, it is unsurprising that across time and place, peoples’ hair has also been used to make artistic statements.

Through objects drawn from both our art and material culture collections, The Long and the Short of It touches upon the myriad habits and associations relevant to hair. Together, they provide new ways of considering historical photographs, sculptures, and portraits in oil. They offer new insights into a universal experience, revealing how important our fashion looks and daily rituals are. They also show connections between the past and the present, and between all people.

The Long and the Short of It investigates hair as an emblem of health, beauty, and identity within society. Three main sections trace the evolution of grooming, including products such as tonics and shampoos; tools including brushes, combs, pins, and curlers; and appliances such as permanent wave machines. It addresses changing concepts of propriety and attractiveness, including the covering of the hair for reasons of fashion and faith. Working with hair often requires much time, ritual, and even suffering, in the case of trying to remove or regrow it.

The exhibition highlights styles for men and women: “Gibson Girl” updos; the more androgynous 1920s “flapper” bob; and 1960s beehives. Indeed, a well-known adage describes hair as a “crowning glory.” Drawings by Toronto artist Winnie Truong exaggerate the hyper-femininity associated with long, lush hair. The Long and the Short of It also addresses the cultural pressure to straighten Black hair; and seemingly infinite configurations of men’s beards, sideburns, and moustaches.

In 18th and 19th century Canada, hair cuttings played an important role in the decorative arts, an activity that contemporary artists continue to comment upon. Victorian hair wreaths and jewellery are joined by 2000s-era counterparts. All the selections make statements about individuality, group ties, and status.

EXHIBITIONS

Pushing Paper

January 26 to May 12, 2019
Ivey Centre Gallery

This exhibition explores the depths of our regional history and art vaults, showcasing art and artifacts that reveal the ubiquity of paper in all aspects of everyday life. In 2013, an association of paper historians announced that there are now around 20,000 uses for paper. Still, over time many have denigrated this extraordinary invention as “ordinary”. This exhibition demonstrates that paper has been central to human progress, and is a vital element within the art sphere.

Pushing Paper emphasize paper’s versatility in supporting and communicating human activity. You will see everything from clothing to wrappings, from lamps to toys, from books to stationery, and much more. Some items you will recognize from everyday use, and some items will strike you as bizarre, but all will intrigue.

Many artists have traditionally made “works on paper”: drawings, paintings, or prints made on “rag” or other types of this material. As is suggested by the exhibition title, Pushing Paper looks at artworks that extend the ways in which paper can be used in artistic expression.

Selections include elaborate cut paper work by Myriam Dion; incised and painted imagery based on botanical studies by London’s Leslie Putnam; embossing reminiscent of Art Nouveau and Art Deco by Natasha Mazurka; painstaking stop motion animation based on the miniature sculpture of Cybèle Young; and much more.

Creative Cloth: Aesthetics and Apparel

January 26 to May 12, 2019
Ivey North Gallery

Creative Cloth shares Museum London’s rich holdings of fabric-based works, gathering items from both the regional history and art collections. Objects from the historical collection illustrate the range of fabrics available to us. The art selections, which include new acquisitions, are further enhanced by loans of work from a variety of contemporary Canadian artists. Taken together, the art and objects reveal not only the diversity of textile-based art made in Canada but also the evolving stories behind our clothing, implements, housewares, and décor.

Learn about the myriad skills and processes involved in working with fibre; and the social, cultural, and labour values associated with this type of work. This exhibition explores weaving, stitchery, quilting, and other methods often denigrated as “craft.” Visitors will see both natural and synthetic materials used in hand-made artworks as well as mass-produced goods.

Each object is an intriguing document helping us to explore a number of questions. What assumptions do we make about both makers and products? What is the role of cloth in our homes and on our bodies? Do we recognize the sheer adaptability of cloth as a medium that supports all aspects of our lives while allowing us to express ourselves?

Artists in Creative Cloth include Robert Davidovitz, Sky Glabush, Sharmistha Kar, Janet Morton, Ed Pien, Sarah Hartland Rowe, Mina Weetatluk, and Joyce Wieland, among many other historical makers, both known and anonymous.

Taking the Long View: The Museum London Art Collection, from its Beginning to Today

Ongoing
Volunteer/Moore Galleries

Museum London is happy to present a large, permanent art exhibition comprised of well-loved treasures from the vaults; intriguing, though lesser-known gems; and recent acquisitions of modern and contemporary art. This exhibition re-establishes our commitment to providing visitors with an ongoing survey of our collection.

Taking the Long View demonstrates the ways in which a public art collection can record and reflect a community. This selection gives precedence to the accomplishments of London and area artists from the mid-1800s through the 2000s. It sets these achievements within a national context, and illuminates ways in which London has always been a centre of great artistic vitality, and at times at the forefront of national innovation.

Divided into thematic groupings, the exhibition has been installed in a traditional Salon style, using vivid wall colours and a wide range of close-set paintings. Sections include Faces, which includes portraits by London painters, and often depicting prominent city personages. A special component celebrates the paintings of Paul Peel (1860-92), London’s best-known 19th century artist. Another theme, Places, illustrates how much the city has grown and changed. A third main grouping explores London Regionalism, an important cultural impulse which began in the 1960s and is still examined today. A fourth theme samples work by artists who emerged after the heyday of Regionalism, including more technologically-based pieces.

To provide background, and to showcase the astute judgement and generosity of donors and supporters, Taking the Long View includes works produced across Canada. These include paintings by the Group of Seven, and by pioneers of Canadian abstraction such as the Automatistes, Plasticiens, Painters Eleven, Regina Five, and more. In 2019, new cases will allow the display of fragile works on paper by Inuit and other artists. The galleries also include a flex space for regular, four-month exhibitions. The first, PanCanada, surveys landscape works that represent all parts of the country, encompassing scenes by Emily Carr, Alex Colville, Dorothy Knowles, Pitseolak, and many more.

The JUNOS are coming to London!
To celebrate this, we have five exhibitions showcasing the intersection of art and music.

Art is Art
February 2 to March 31
Moore Gallery
Highlighting the synergy between visual art and music, Art is Art showcases the visual practices of prominent Canadian recording artists. Commissioned by The Canadian Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences (CARAS), JUNO Award-winning artists create works of visual art that celebrate the creative connection between these two disciplinary fields.

Polaris Music Prize Posters
February 2 to March 31
Community Gallery
As a sister organization, CARAS/The JUNO Awards are proud to support the Polaris Music Prize; rewarding artists who produce Canadian music albums of distinction. Illustrators are commissioned yearly to produce artwork in the spirit of gig posters for the year’s shortlisted albums. Come see posters of the 13 winning albums.

JUNO Photography Exhibition
February 2 to March 31
Community Gallery
This retrospective photography exhibition showcases the past 40+ years of Canadian music and the JUNO Awards. It includes more than 50 photos from the JUNO Awards’ 40th anniversary book, Music from Far and Wide, as well as never-before-seen photos taken by Canada’s foremost rock and roll photographers.

Women to the Front
February 2 to March 31
Interior Gallery
This exhibition pays respect to voices that are often missing from the story of the Canadian music industry. The influence of Canadian women in music is indisputable as they continue to dominate the charts, break records, and innovate. Take a look inside the layered and complex world of being a female in the music industry. Who invited women to the front? The women.
The Art of Music: A Student Exhibition
January 12 to April 28, 2019
Lawson Gallery

Museum London invited elementary and secondary students (K-12) from the Thames Valley District School Board and the London District Catholic School Board to reflect on the theme of “music” and create artwork in a variety of media. Whether students play music or enjoy listening to it; favourite songs, instruments, and bands all served as the inspiration to create their art. Teachers were encouraged to make this a cross-curricular learning experience and link the visual arts to subjects like music and math. All submissions were juried and a selection of approximately 100 student artworks are included in the exhibition.
